The Man Who Can Talk to Geese*

by Sylvia Harkin

Geese are causing a problem in City Park in Amsterdam. Hundreds of geese walk around freely. They are aggressive and sometimes bite visitors. To solve this problem, the park director asked Martin Hof to help him. Martin has an unusual talent: he talks to geese!

5 Martin became interested in geese when he was a student and worked at a zoo. Every time the geese made too much noise, he used to get down on his knees and whisper to them. The geese listened to his whispers and calmed down.

Martin explains that geese are not really aggressive. However, there are so many of them in the park that they think the park belongs to them. They are also afraid that 10 people will hurt them and their young geese. This is why they try to bite people.

"When I talk to the geese, I tell them that no one will hurt them. They listen to me and behave better," says Martin. However, some geese do not listen to him. Martin found another solution for these geese. "I take them to the zoo," he says. "If they can't live with people, they will have to live with animals."
